The Suspicion #2

Chapter 1 by CARTER JENKINS

Chapter 1:

Did the detective possibly arrest the wrong person?! The detective had accused the wrong person! The detective then set out to try to find the mysterious man who was messing with the world's devices. Once again, no one knew who was behind the mystery. In this next story, we find out.

HONK! BEEP! BEEP! The cars all around the city of New York were going crazy. It was a delightful Monday morning in the year of 2017. The hacker had been caught in 2016 and put into the Tech jail, at least that is what people thought. Everyone was trying to get to work at the same time so there was a giant traffic jam on Main Street. There was a man named Mark who was in this traffic jam, honking like crazy. The year before when the mysterious man was caught, Mark noticed a virus on his computer. He took his computer to the verizon store and had the manager check it out. The manager came back and said

"You need a new computer, the virus is too bad to wipe off of the computer." Mark then became frustrated with the manager.

"Oh," said Mark.

on his new computer, but it had to be done. He was then trying to help the detective find the mysterious man that was messing with all of the devices.

"I wonder where he is," Mark had said.

Chapter 2:

"Hehehehe!" Said Jonnie, the mysterious man.

He was the man that wasn't guilty but he was still being questioned. Jonnie was currently in tech jail, trying to get out USING technology. Jonnie had been in tech jail for two years now and he was starting to go ballistic! He was trying to create new technology to break out of the tech jail. The criminal wanted to get out of jail so he could create total chaos for the whole city. But wasn't there another man trying to take his position? The criminal thought to himself, "Is there another person out there?" Jonnie was starting to get freaked out just thinking about it.

He then called out

"Hello? Is there anyone here?"

The mastermind was now desperately calling out for help.

"What do you want?" Came a strange voice out of the darkness.

"Who's there?" Jonnie called out.

"Why, I'm the gatekeeper!" Said the man in the dark corner triumphantly.

"Can you please help me?" Jonnie called out once again.

"Um, no." said the gatekeeper.

"Why not?" Jonnie asked.

"Because I work for the technology prison and if I let you out, you could cause some serious trouble."

"This is very repining," said Jonnie.

"Please stop your griping," said the gatekeeper. (The gatekeeper's name is Robert by the way.)

"What griping?" Called out Jonnie.

Please stop whining," Robert spat back in frustration for the second time now.

"You do the crime, you spend the time in jail," said Jonnie with more irritation in his voice.

"It is no use arguing with you," said Jonnie with disappointment in his voice.

"You're right!" said Robert.

"I'm THE most stubborn gatekeeper in all of New York City," said Robert with a little more irritation in his articulation.

"Alright, I guess I can't convince you into letting me out of this horrid place," spat Jonnie.

"Well, I'm going on my lunch break so I'll have Brian (The other gatekeeper.) watch over your cell. * Mark was now fuming over the Verizon© store incident. He just couldn't get over the fact that he ended up spending more money on an Apple© computer than having his old computer fixed. When Mark arrived at work, he was in a bad mood. He was bossing his co-workers around like crazy! One of his associates even stopped him in the hallway, telling him to get in a better mood or else he would get fired. After a few agonizing hours of work and dealing with customers, his boss called him into his office.

"Mark, sit down, I have something to tell you," said the boss. (His name is Thurman Ralston.)

"Ok, what do you want Mr. Ralston?" Jonnie said.

"I think your behavior is affecting our business Mark."

"Ok, so what are you saying?" Mark questioned.

"What I'm trying to say is that I think that you should leave the company," exclaimed Mr. Ralston with great triumph.

"Ok, I'll just pack my things and leave." said Mark with a lot of sadness in his voice.

"Goodbye Mark."

"Goodbye Mr. Ralston."

Chapter 3:

"Ughhhh," Jonnie lamented so loud that the other prisoners could hear him.

"Be quiet!" yelled the prisoners with great ire.

"I'm sorry," Jonnie said with sadness all over his face

"IT IS NOT OKAY!" yelled the prisoners even more ire in their voices.

"Ok, sorry," Jonnie called out.

So then, Jonnie wanted to get out of his cell so bad. He decided to create a new invention out of the materials he snuck into his pocket. (For some reason, the cops didn't check Jonnie's pockets.)

"I wonder what I could make?" Jonnie thought to himself. He was struggling to think of what he could create with his wacky materials.

"I could make some sort of shocking material to burst the cell gate open," Jonnie kept wondering. So, he got to work. First, he started to pick the chocolate chips out of the granola bar with the #2 pencil. Second, he stuck the safety pin inside of the granola bar along with the pencil. Finally, it made a spark!

"Yes!" Jonnie exclaimed.

"I did it!" He said with great triumph. He then bursted the cell gate open and ran free through the prison. BEEP! BEEP! BEEP! The prison sirens were going off like crazy! Jonnie slipped under the emergency doors that were sliding down. He took off across the street and through the woods as Robert chased him.

As Mark was driving home from the office, he got frustrated.

"Why did Mr. Ralston fire me?"

Mark wondered to himself. He kept thinking about his family and what they would think about their father getting fired from his new job.

When he got home, his kids asked him "Why did you get fired daddy?"

"Well, my boss didn't really appreciate my behavior so he called me into his office and fired me!"

Mark shouted with lots of anger in his voice.

"Sorry for asking daddy," his son and daughter said with disappointment in their voices. At that moment, Mark's wife Melinda walked into the room.

"Mark, is everything ok?"

"Yeah, I'm just getting really frustrated with everything today."

"Oh, ok," Melinda said with sadness in her voice.

Chapter 4:

While Mark was frustrated at Mr. Ralston and his kids, the detective was having a problem with finding the actual technology criminal.

"I'm starting to get a little fed up with this whole case," the detective had stated in his mind.

"I should probably go check out this guy a little more to see if I can find anything that will lead me to the criminal," the detective thought to himself. He had been searching for days and days without any clues or hints. He wondered if the criminal had used time travel.

"No, that is impossible," he had said before. But was it? No one had ever discovered time travel. But, someone could've discovered it secretly. Such as the criminal! There were more questions than answers! This was a challenging case for the detective. He just could not find the criminal! "I really need to look into this," said the detective.

"Yes, yes you do," came a mysterious voice out of the darkness. It was the criminal!

"What do yo.....," the detective was trying to talk to the man, but then all of a sudden..... BOOM! There was a bomb that the criminal placed a few feet away! The criminal started to run for his life but police stopped him in his tracks.

"Where do you think you're going?" Officer Christopher Walken shouted.

"I was.... I was.....," the criminal was trembling with fear. He was then arrested, thrown into the officer's car, and taken to prison. Officer Walken was then trying to find the detective.

"Sir?" He shouted. Officer Walken yelled "Sir" two more times. On the third "Sir," the detective responded.

"Yes?" The detective replied in fear.

"Hello, I'm Officer Christopher Walken," he said.

"Can you please help me?" The detective said with even more fear in his voice.

"Yes, I will help you," Officer Walken said with great triumph in his voice. Officer Walken then helped the detective out of the pit that the bomb formed, and drove back to NYC. During the drive back to NYC from the forest, Officer Walken noticed a person or object fling across the street. He told the detective to stay alert. Just at that moment..... PLUNK! Jonnie was on the windshield!

"Hello!" Jonnie yelled from the windshield in a very creepy voice.

"Get off of my car!" Officer Walken yelled.

"Never!" Jonnie screamed through the lightning storm's howl. Officer Walken was then swerving to try to get Jonnie off of his windshield.

"You have to help me!" Jonnie screamed. Just at that moment, Jonnie flew off of the car and into the street. (Luckily, the street was abandoned so no one would run Jonnie over.) Officer Walken stepped out of the car, keeping his right hand on his taser.

"Why are you out of prison Jonnie?" Officer Walken yelled from several feet away.

"I was out of prison because I was the criminal!" Jonnie yelled.

"I'm not the man you want," Jonnie yelled. Officer Walken pulled out his taser and let it fly free in the air. The taser struck Jonnie and he fell to the ground. The detective took the officer's handcuffs and cuffed Jonnie.

"We're going to go take you to the questioning room," the detective said.

"Final!" He yelled.

"I'll admit that the man you just arrested is the criminal, and I told him to spread the virus for technology throughout NYC," Jonnie mumbled.

"We shall execute you tonight," officer Walken said to Jonnie with irritation in his voice. Jonnie then started to cry. He didn't know what to do.

Chapter 5:

Later that night, Jonnie was in the death room with the other police officers.

"You shall be sentenced to death!" Officer Walken yelled through the chamber.

"Wait!" A mysterious voice came out of nowhere. It was a man with short, dark hair, 6 feet tall, and jeans.

"I'm the real criminal and my name is Mark," Mark said. Everyone thought that Mark was the good guy. But he wasn't.

"You shall die!" Officer Walken yelled. The officers were already taking Mark by the wrists and chaining him. BANG! Officer Walken put Mark to rest, blood dripping everywhere, and that was it. Mark had died. He was released from his shackles and fell to the ground with no expression.

Chapter 6:

Everyone gathered in NYC for the celebration the next day. Fireworks went off, pop-its were thrown, etc. All of the people were so excited about the criminal dying. Officer Walken stepped up to the stage to talk about the search being over for the criminal. At that moment, Mark's family arrived! The family rampaged through the crowd to get to Christopher Walken. There was a security guard that looked over his shoulder and saw the family!

He darted for the son first. He came up behind the son and handcuffed him! The guard then took him to a police cruiser and slammed the door in the face of the son. There was a second guard that saw the daughter! He jolted after her as fast as he could. He handcuffed her as well and put her into the same police car as her brother. A third guard realized the trouble that was happening. He actually knew the family. He knew that the mom was somewhere to be found!

He kept looking and looking, but never found her.

After the celebration cleared up, the guard searched all over Times Square even more! Not a single soul was at The Square. The guard was so confused. (The Suspicion #3) to find out more!
